The doctrine of the Trinity is an invitation to drink as deeply as we can from the knowledge of God, knowing we’ll never hit bottom. It’s challenge-not to figure out the inner workings of God (we can’t), but to take seriously the reality God reveals, which is both simple and profound. God created everything. God comes to us directly into creation and is still acting, changing, and inspiring today. Do we believe that?

The early Christians couldn’t help but end up talking about the triune nature of God. They didn’t come up with the idea of the Trinity. The Trinity came up with them. They were monotheists. The earliest followers of Jesus-the witnesses to the resurrection who went to their death rather than turn their backs on the message of who Christ was-had spent their whole lives hearing, recognizing, and praying, Hear, O Israel! The Lord our God is Lord alone (Mark 12:29). This God took them out of Egypt! Every Passover, they remembered: God took us out of Egypt! And now God took away the power of death too.

Christ’s witnesses knew God was still with them. The Spirit of God let them see what Jesus meant and led them to tell other people. They couldn’t help it. If they were to claim they knew anything, they knew they’d have to talk about the power of God, which had overcome their own defeat. These were people who ran away, who lost everything. These were preachers who walked into the same city they had fled to say that God had changed everything. Suffering meant something else now. Hope would not let go of them.

In the words of Deuteronomy 4:32: Did anything so great ever happen before? Was it ever heard of?

Dan Finucane
